INTRODUCTION

THE early map makers were artists and not mere artisans. They produced maps which reveal a fine imaginative sense, with a feeling for color and harmony; and for this reason they are found to be of a high decorative value. In the minds of the pioneers of map making was a sense of wonderment that the world was so marvellous and so beautiful. They adorned their productions with rich coloring of ships and shipping craft. Portraits of princes and potentates decorated the margins, and bits of native costume filled up the corners.

The earliest Atlases may have been produced upon a thrifty principle and are therefore rather rough in technique, though they are among the most scarce and valuable of all. The art of map making in Europe quickly developed. The earlier work of Mercator, and of Hondius, Ortelius and others had shown the way, but had only whetted the appetite for something better. The great publishers of Amsterdam began in 1631 to issue Atlases and Maps which even if published to-day, with the greater facilities of production now known, would be regarded as amazing enterprises. In the seventeenth century, when printing and engraving were in danger of becoming commercialized and when they had lost much of their simple beauty, the firm of Blaeu of Amsterdam raised map production to a fine art and began their vast enterprise of successfully mapping out the countries of the world. Yet another great Dutch firm arose—that of Jansson—and issued admirable plans of towns and cities, which were a great advance upon the earlier work of Braun and Hogenburg, and of John Speede. The output of Atlases from Amsterdam in the first half of the seventeenth century marks a great landmark in the history of geography. Every library in the princely houses of Europe had one or more of them, a noble row of folios bound in Dutch vellum with simple ornaments of gold.

The collection now being sold was made by one who had vision to perceive before almost anyone else had done so the great merit and high decorative value of early maps, and who concentrated upon getting together the best of them with contemporary coloring.

Some of the greater landmarks in the history of old maps may be here noticed. It was in 1570 that Ortelius produced at Antwerp his first Atlas. The story runs as follows: An Antwerp merchant named Hooftman had begun in the sixteenth century to collect old maps. His nautical curiosity developed and his collection increased. He soon found that the job of rolling up and unrolling his large maps was a nuisance, so Abraham Ortelius was commissioned to obtain as many single sheet maps as he could find and to stitch and bind them in a volume. Having in this way put together about thirty maps for his master Hooftman, Ortelius decided to extend the benefit to all scholars and to publish a book of maps. Thus began the Atlas by which he is known to all geographers.

In the early years of the seventeenth century, Gerard Mercator and Jodocus Hondius produced their great Atlas. This was published in various languages and became an epoch-making book. The name of Mercator is now a household word. The craft of map making descended from Hondius to his son in law Jan Jansson, who became one of the great map makers of Europe, founding the house of Janssonius at Amsterdam.

Meanwhile the Englishman John Speede had, in 1611, produced his Atlas of the most famous parts of the world, with maps decorated with the arms of leading families and with border illustrations of figures in national costumes and small inset views of towns and cities. For many of his maps Speede borrowed from Hondius and others. The year 1631 marks the advent of the greatest map producing house in Europe. It was in this year that W. J. Blaeu produced his first Atlas. The work was a success and it is now rare. In 1635 Blaeu, now joined by his son Jean Blaeu, published a larger Atlas in two volumes. It is in the introduction to this Atlas that the younger Blaeu in a touching paragraph speaks with a filial admiration of his father's work and how he started map making because, being stimulated by the examples of the great geographers (Mercator and others), he decided to devote his life to mapping out the world. The result was that the great house of Blaeu was soon producing the most beautiful maps the world has ever seen—lovely in coloring, excellent as to paper and beautiful in their ornamentation, their small views, their coats-of-arms, their allegorical figures and their native costumes.

The House of Jansson, which was contemporary with Blaeu, was conducted by direct descendants of the family of Hondius. They produced about 1630 a series of maps and plans of towns, done for the most part by George Hoefnagle, which were a great advance upon the famous book of town plans done by George Braun and Francis Hogenburg and published a decade or two earlier.

Amsterdam continued to be the chief map producing city of Europe. Other great cartographers arose and among them Peter Goos, who published in the middle of the seventeenth century his great and beautiful maritime Atlas with fine border ornaments. Other countries joined with the Dutch, and Atlases and Maps of great beauty were produced by Sanson, De Wit, Seller, Nicolas Visscher, Van Keulen, Le Clerc, to name but a few of the great map makers of the period. Under Blaeu the art had risen very high. He had set a lofty standard of design and execution. The great Amsterdam house had shown the way and had improved in artistic methods upon all who had gone before. There can be no wonder that the collectors of the twentieth century have detected the merits of these Atlases, which for two centuries have lain buried in old private libraries, for the most part unopened.

ORIGINAL CHART OF THE TERRAQUEOUS GLOBE

- 300-
55 [BELLIN (JACQUES NICOLAS).] A Correct Chart of the Terraqueous Globe, on which are Described Lines Shewing the Variation of the Magnetic Needle in the most Frequent Seas; originally Composed, in the Year 1700, by the Celebrated Dr. Edmund Halley; Renewed by William Mountaine and James Dodson according to Observations made about the Year 1756; and now Published with all the Necessary Emendations. London: Printed for Robert Sayer and John Bennett. 2 sections, and two sheets of MS. description to be inset at the sides of the maps. 4 pieces.

THE ORIGINAL MAP DRAWN ABOUT 1764 BY J. N. BELLIN, THE FAMOUS FRENCH HYDROGRAPHER, IN RED INK ON TWO LARGE FOLIO SHEETS, $21\frac{1}{2}$ by $24\frac{1}{2}$ INCHES; WITH THE ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPT DESCRIPTIONS, ON TWO NARROW FOLIO SHEETS. THE WHOLE WAS MADE TO BE ENGRAVED AND PRINTED FIRST FOR BELLIN'S OWN ATLAS OF 1764, AND THEN FOR SAYER'S ATLAS.

AN EXTREMELY INTERESTING WORK SHOWING THE PROGRESS OF GEOGRAPHICAL DISCOVERY BETWEEN 1700 AND 1764. Although these are variation charts, the outlines of all coasts of the world are shown, with the names of countries, cities, islands, etc. in red ink. Apparently Halley's map was copied on a reduced scale, and strips of paper superimposed upon that to mark the change in outline resulting from new discoveries. Nearly the whole western coast of America has been changed, including the North-west portion where two new ports are mentioned north of "Georges Sound": "Port Bucarely" and "Port Remedios." An engraved chart of the North Pole has been superimposed on the map of the Eastern Hemisphere, with new discoveries charted in red ink.

VERY RARE AND SPLENDIDLY COLORED MAP OF THE WORLD
MOSES PITT, 1680

[NUMBER 56]

56 THE WORLD

200 — Pitt (Moses). Nova Totius Terrarum Orbis Geographica ac Hydrographica Tabula. Title in gold. Colored. On three of the borders are fifteen portrayals of the mythological gods and goddesses, Venus, Jupiter, Terra, Mars, Aqua, etc.; and on the lower border seven ancient and mythological scenes, including Babylon, Colossus, Temple of Diana, etc. All beautifully colored by hand. The coat-of-arms of the Bishop of Oxford is in one corner, and charts of the poles in others. Folio.

[Oxford: for Moses Pitt, 1680]

VERY RARE AND SPLENDIDLY COLORED AND ILLUSTRATED MAP OF THE WORLD. This is one of the three maps on America published in the most magnificent work of its kind in England. Only four volumes were issued, at so great an expense that Pitt failed and was thrown into a debtor's prison.

AN APPARENTLY UNRECORDED MAP
ROBERT GREENE, 1676

[NUMBER 57]

57 THE WORLD

Greene (Robert). A New Mapp of the World. By Robert Greene at the Rose & Crowne in Budg row. Colored. Folio. Framed.

[London], 1676

AN APPARENTLY UNRECORDED MAP. Not in Phillips, Kohl collection and other authorities consulted.

Consists of four circular charts: the Eastern and Western hemispheres, and the North and South poles. In each of the four corners is a beautifully painted scene: that of Europe, a hunting scene, with a king, queen, lady in waiting and page, all in ceremonial costume, in the foreground; of Asia, a combat between horsemen with two potentates, two women and a page; of Africa, children hunting led by a centaur, an elephant and horseman in the distance, and a man, woman and child in costume in the foreground; of America, a native king and queen with a child, and in the background several natives around a fire. The map of America shows California as an island.

[SEE ILLUSTRATION]

AN EXCESSIVELY RARE MAP, APPARENTLY FROM THE FIRST HONDIVS
DATED 1602

[NUMBER 58]

58 THE WORLD

75- Mercator (Gerardus). Orbis Terræ Novissima Descriptio. Authore Gerardo Mercatore, nuperime vero iuxta recentiores Cosmographos aucta et recognita. I. Hondius sculp. I. le Clerc excu. 1602. Colored. Inset with dolphins and ships, symbolical figures, etc. Folio. [Amsterdam: I. Hondius], 1602

AN EXCESSIVELY RARE MAP, APPARENTLY FROM THE FIRST HONDIVS, WHICH IS THE SECOND MERCATOR EDITION OF THE ATLAS MAJOR. Apparently no copy of this edition of 1606 has appeared at auction. The first Mercator edition was published for the heirs of Mercator in 1602, and Jodocus Hondius brought out an edition in 1606 augmented by fifty new maps by himself and others, of which the above was one. Phillips gives the title of this map from the third Mercator edition to after the death of Hondius, but none of these titles agrees with this copy. As the map is dated 1602 and bears the name of Hondius, it must therefore be from the FIRST HONDIVS EDITION. Not in Phillips, the Kohl collection, or other authorities consulted.

A BEAUTIFUL MAP. Australia surrounds the South Pole; notes in the body of the map tell of the discovery of America by Columbus, the discovery of New Guinea by Magellan, of Nova Albion in 1580; and such places as Nova Fran, Norombega, Florida, Mexico, etc. are named.

[SEE ILLUSTRATION]
